

Hearing with the Eyes

by Ruxandra Mitache & Pierre Ajavon

when I began to write,
I found some interesting things in the way,
I found transference, I found clairvoyance,
I found the possibility of knowing the future

I always dream

I am a dreamer

I dream

dreaming

means dream

how do you translate a dream?

the dream

it's black and white?

yes

well,

depends

of course

the coloured one is mono?

the black & white is stereo

and again

it's the projection of my brain?

sometimes not at all

well,

I want to dream
more
I never get bored to
dream
and I dream
I pray
I meditate
I always dream
and again
I am a dreamer
I dream

light coral
frozen silk

smiling
freeing my voice
freeing my brain

writing
the daydream

song

statique

non-statique

bleu, fenêtre blanche

dans le jardin ouvert

une platane ancien

commencé à chanter

petite chanson

de lumière

bleu, blanche

vert

jaune

tangerine

hearing the light
listening the wind
balancing

drawing the mirror
memorising the light
entering the flow

every color
evaporates into
the night sky

in the night
poetry flies
in the day

poetry flows

moment liquide

clepsydre flottant

merci

une souvenir éphémère

une chanson

écrire poésie

pour le son

An installation with projections of moving abstract images constructed from analog photographic frames and digital photographs of mountains, accompanied by specific sounds creating an atmosphere of abstract emotional experiences.

Radiating lines multiply and form elegant shapes, emanating somehow familiar forms that catch the eye. We may remember these forms yet we feel them new. Understanding the eye with the ear, a dense confluence of non common aesthetic modes of presenting information is revealed.

The project explore the interaction created by the fusion of analog photography, the moving image versus static frames, abstract forms in the aspect of synchronised sound. For the video composition, I used 54 photograms.
